The Smith College Museum of Art is currently showing a group of books, prints, photographs, drawings and watercolors which commemorate the publication of John Ruskin's most important work on architecture, "The Seven Lamps of Architecture."

The exhibition will continue through December 17. Included are Ruskin drawings and an aquatint by Thomas Shotter Boys which reproduces a Ruskin drawing of St. Marks. This was presented to the Smith Museum by Charles E. Goodspeed of Boston.

Several copies of the first edition of the "Seven Lamps of Architecture" are being shown as well as several prints for which Ruskin made soft-ground etchings. There were ten first editions of the book in America, all published before 1880

Mr. Henry Russell Hitchcock, acting director of the museum, states that the many drawings and watercolors from the 1830's to the 1870's illustrate Ruskin's developement as a graphic artist. The photographs and contemporary wood-cuts show his influence on the architecture of the 1850's.

The exhibit, which precedes by a month the <sup>50th</sup> anniversary of Mr. Ruskin's death, was assembled with the assistance of Wellesley, Harvard, and Yale.

An exhibit and sale of student art work before Christmas vacation has been announced by and scheduled by Jacqueline Brown, 1950, president of Studio Club.

The purpose of the sale is a long range plan to stimulate student interest in the collection of original works. If the response is good, the proceeds from the sale will swell the SCADS fund treasury.

Any contribution is accepted, but it must not be the result of course work. Works should be placed in the Studio Club room in Hillyer Basement as soon as possible. There should be a written indication that the work is intended for the sale.

Last night, in spite of early unfavorable conditions, the annual Yuletide celebration, Quad Sing, sent strains of french<sup>and</sup> traditional carols, as well as wassail songs into the cold night air. As usual, each window in the Quad was lit by a candle. Gatherings and parties followed in most of the houses and provided a pleasant follow up for a week-end on which many houses held their fall dances.

The theatre production of the "Young and Fair" by Nashe which was presented over the week-end ~~presented~~ abounded in excellent acting by both principals and minor characters. The entire cast deserved and got praise from the audience. Although the play itself was not of the most inspiring sort, ~~the~~ handling of it by the theater department provided excellent entertainment.
